How does this year deliver your curriculum intent?	The History department's choice of GCSE modules is carefully linked to the skills and knowledge our students need in order to become well-rounded citizens. Their studies will comprise of a depth study of Elizabethan England which helps them to identify the long-lasting impact of Tudor rule on the country in which they live. They will also complete a breadth study of how medicine and public health has changed in Britain from medieval times to the present day, a topic very much relevant to their own lives in recent times. They will also study the dangers of extremist political views and the impact they can have on international relations, a concept they can link to the wider world around them.
